

Task Achievement

5 (Excellent)

- The text fully develops all content points with a wide range of relevant ideas and supporting details.
- It meets all the task requirements and text type conventions (including appropriate format and length for an article).
- Register and tone are entirely appropriate for the target context and are consistently maintained.
- The writing is well-organized and coherent, fully achieving the task's purpose – the target reader is fully informed and engaged.

4 (Good)

- The text addresses all the main content points with relevant information, though some points could be more fully developed.
- It generally follows the required article format and conventions with only minor lapses (e.g. slight length deviation or minor format inconsistencies).
- Register and style are mostly appropriate for the task, with only occasional inconsistencies.
- The text is generally well-organized and clear, achieving the task with only minor shortcomings.
- The target reader is well informed overall.

3 (Satisfactory)

- The text addresses most of the required content points, with generally relevant information, though one or two points may be underdeveloped or omitted.
- There are several inconsistencies in following the article format and conventions, and the register or tone is not always appropriate for the task.
- The writing is adequately organized, and the task is mostly achieved.
- The target reader is on the whole informed, though a clearer overall structure would improve communication.

2 (Limited)

- The text addresses only some of the content points. Other key points are missing or only superficially covered, and parts of the text may be irrelevant to the task.
- It fails to meet many of the article format and length requirements, showing little awareness of text type conventions.
- Register and tone are often inappropriate or inconsistent, which may confuse or disengage the reader.
- The overall organization is weak and difficult to follow, so the task is only partially achieved and the target reader is only partially informed.

1 (Inadequate)

- The text fails to address most of the required content points, providing very little relevant information (possibly due to misunderstanding the task).
- It does not follow the required article format or length, showing no awareness of text type conventions.
- The register is completely inappropriate or inconsistent for the task.
- The text lacks coherent organization, making it very difficult to understand.
- Overall, the task is not achieved and the target reader is minimally informed.

Cohesion and Coherence

5 (Excellent)

- Wide range of cohesive devices (linking words, pronoun reference, conjunctions) used consistently and flexibly to signal logical relationships.
- Paragraphing is very clear: each paragraph has a central idea, and ideas flow smoothly from one paragraph to the next.
- Sentences and ideas are sequenced logically, with effective use of referencing (e.g., pronouns, demonstratives) and substitution to avoid repetition.
- The overall structure is highly coherent: arguments build naturally, and the reader can easily follow the progression from introduction to conclusion.

4 (Good)

- Range of linking words used mostly effectively to indicate relationships (addition, contrast, cause-effect).
- Attempts some complex organizational patterns (e.g., using subordinate clauses, thematic progression), though not always perfectly executed.
- Paragraphing is generally clear: most paragraphs focus on one main idea, and there is a logical progression between them.
- The text is coherent overall: significant points are highlighted with supporting details, and readers can follow the main line of thought with minimal effort.

3 (Satisfactory)

- Uses some basic linking words (and, but, so, because) correctly, but relies heavily on them, making transitions sometimes mechanical or repetitive.
- Attempts paragraphing, though paragraphs may be uneven in length or occasionally lack a clear central idea.
- Organization is adequate: ideas are presented in a generally logical order, but some connections between sentences or paragraphs may be unclear or abrupt.
- The text is mostly coherent, but readers may need to re-read sections to grasp the intended relationships.

2 (Limited)

- Uses few or inappropriate linking devices; sentences often joined by simple comma splices or run-ons.
- Paragraphing is inconsistent or absent: some paragraphs contain multiple ideas, while others are overly short.
- Ideas are poorly sequenced: the writer may jump between points without clear transitions, making it difficult to follow the argument.
- Overall coherence is weak: parts of the text feel disconnected, and readers may struggle to identify how ideas relate to one another.

1 (Inadequate)

- Rarely uses cohesive devices; there is little to no linking between sentences.
- Paragraphing is absent or random: there is no clear division of ideas.
- Sentences and ideas are disjointed, lacking any logical order or progression.
- The text is incoherent: readers cannot follow the argument or see how points connect, making comprehension very difficult.

Grammatical Accuracy and Range

5 (Excellent)

- Consistently accurate use of a wide range of both simple and complex structures.
- Flexibility in employing subordinate clauses, conditionals, and varied sentence patterns with virtually no error.
- Spelling and punctuation are almost faultless; very rare slips do not distract the reader.
- Errors are minimal and non-systematic, showing full command of B2 grammar.

4 (Good)

- High accuracy in simple structures; mostly accurate control of complex structures (e.g., relative clauses, passive voice), with occasional slips that do not impede understanding.
- Spelling and punctuation are generally correct, with only minor mistakes.
- Demonstrates a good range of grammatical forms appropriate to B2, though complex forms may appear slightly “learned.”

3 (Satisfactory)

- Reasonable control of simple structures; attempts complex forms (e.g., conditional sentences, complex noun phrases) with mixed success.
- Frequent minor errors (word order, article usage, tense agreement), but meaning remains clear.
- Spelling and punctuation are generally accurate but may show mother-tongue influence or inconsistency.
- Range is mainly simple, with occasional correct complexity.

2 (Limited)

- Frequent errors in simple structures (e.g., subject–verb agreement, basic tense forms) that sometimes impede communication.
- Rare or inaccurate attempts at complex forms, often resulting in ungrammatical sentences.
- Spelling and punctuation errors are noticeable and may distract the reader.
- Range is restricted, relying heavily on basic forms and simple sentences.

1 (Inadequate)

- Very limited control of even simple grammatical forms—errors are persistent and often prevent comprehension.
- Almost no correct use of complex structures.
- Spelling and punctuation are very inaccurate (e.g., frequent mistakes in basic words, sentence-ending punctuation missing), making the text difficult to follow.
- Range is virtually absent, with only isolated words or fragments used correctly.

Lexical Accuracy and Range

5 (Excellent)

- Wide range of vocabulary, including topic-specific and less common lexical items, used accurately and appropriately for communicative effect.
- Effective variation in phrasing and wording to avoid repetition (e.g., synonyms, paraphrase).
- Collocations and idiomatic expressions used correctly and naturally.
- Occasional minor slips (e.g. single-word choice or register mismatch), but meaning is never obscured.

4 (Good)

- Good range of vocabulary relevant to the topic, with generally accurate word choice.
- Some variation in word use (e.g. synonyms, basic paraphrase) though with occasional repetition of common words.
- Collocations and fixed phrases used mostly correctly; minor awkwardness may occur but does not hinder communication.
- Errors (e.g. slight collocation mismatches or overgeneralizations) are infrequent and do not impede understanding.

3 (Satisfactory)

- Adequate range of vocabulary for B2, but relies on common or general words rather than more precise or topic-specific terms.
- Limited variation: noticeable repetition of the same lexical items or simple synonyms.
- Some attempts at collocation or idiomatic language, but errors (e.g. unnatural combinations) occur and may distract the reader.
- Word-choice errors (e.g. minor wrong register, slightly imprecise terms) occur occasionally, but overall meaning is clear.

2 (Limited)

- Restricted lexical range, with heavy reliance on very basic and generic vocabulary.
- Frequent repetition of common words and phrases; little or no paraphrasing.
- Attempts at more advanced vocabulary often result in inappropriate or incorrect choice, leading to confusion.
- Collocation and register errors are common and sometimes impede comprehension.

1 (Inadequate)

- Very limited vocabulary, often unable to convey simple ideas accurately.
- Near-constant repetition of the same basic words with no variation.
- Frequent, severe word-choice errors (e.g. wrong meaning, register) that make comprehension difficult.
- No correct use of collocations or idiomatic language; lexical inaccuracies seriously impede the reader's understanding.

Overall Written Production

5 (Excellent)

- The writer fully meets the communicative purpose: the article engages the reader, conveys ideas fluently, and leaves a clear, persuasive impression.
- Register and tone are entirely appropriate and consistently maintained throughout.
- Text length, format, and style perfectly match the article task requirements.
- The writing is cohesive, coherent, and well-balanced: introduction, body, and conclusion work together seamlessly.
- Minor or no distracting errors; any slip does not detract from the overall impact.

4 (Good)

- The writer effectively fulfills the communicative purpose: the article informs and engages, though a slight lack of flair may appear in places.
- Register and tone are mostly appropriate, with only occasional lapses that do not confuse the reader.
- Format and length are appropriate, with only minor deviations (e.g., slightly under/over word count or small misalignment of article conventions).
- The text is coherent and well-structured, with logical progression; a few transitions might be less smooth.
- Errors (grammar, vocabulary, or mechanics) are infrequent and non-distracting, allowing the reader to focus on content.

3 (Satisfactory)

- The writer generally achieves the communicative purpose: the article is understandable and conveys the main message, but may lack consistency in engagement.
- Register and tone show occasional inconsistency (e.g., informal phrasing where formality is expected), but do not seriously hinder comprehension.
- Format or length may deviate (e.g., paragraphs too short/long, minor omission of article conventions) but the reader still recognizes it as an article.
- The text is adequately organized, though some transitions or paragraph breaks may be abrupt or uneven.
- Errors (grammar, vocabulary, mechanics) are noticeable but do not impede understanding; the reader can still follow the argument with minimal effort.

2 (Limited)

- The writer only partially fulfills the communicative purpose: key messages are conveyed but with unclear or underdeveloped sections, reducing reader engagement.
- Register and tone are often inappropriate or inconsistent (e.g., overly informal or overly formal in places), causing occasional confusion.
- Format and organization fall short of article conventions (e.g., missing title, poorly defined introduction/conclusion, unclear paragraphing).
- The text is weakly organized, with frequent abrupt shifts or lack of logical sequence, requiring the reader to re-read for clarity.
- Errors in grammar, vocabulary, and mechanics are frequent and sometimes impede comprehension; the reader must expend effort to understand content.

1 (Inadequate)

- The writer fails to fulfill the communicative purpose: the article is disjointed, lacks a clear message, and does not engage the reader.
- Register and tone are inappropriate throughout, causing significant confusion (e.g., inconsistent voice, inappropriate style).
- Format conventions are absent or ignored (e.g., no clear article structure, missing title, no separation into paragraphs).
- Organization is chaotic: ideas are scattered without logical progression, making it very difficult to follow.
- Errors are constant and severe in grammar, vocabulary, and mechanics, severely impeding understanding and rendering the text largely incomprehensible.
